A variety of forces are converging — escalating costs within a weak economy worldwide, competitive pressures, the need for improved workforce productivity, health care reform's ongoing impact and new benefit delivery channels — that present unique challenges and opportunities for employers to maintain or achieve a high-performing health program. As a result, companies will refine their strategies and approaches to achieve optimal value from their health benefit programs, and help employees improve health status and overall well-being. Attendees will learn how these and other factors will affect their benefit situations, what new solutions are developing to address these factors, and how to evaluate and determine what the best answer is for their workforce.
